Dear Brother Franklin—

On Sunday, the last day of our meeting, the Indians were gathered in and attended service, while President Young spoke at length of the policy that should be pursued by the people towards the Lamanites. He wanted the people in Provo to divide off the land between the City and the Lake next to the river, and aid the Indians in settling there, where they could have easy access to their fishing grounds, and other advantages which rightfully belonged to them. The Saints should aid them in building houses, establishing schools, teach their children, provide clothing, &c. Where the brethren have cut down their wood, so that the squaws have to go to the mountains for it, it should be hauled to them; otherwise, if they burn up the brethren's fences, they should not complain.

I am, yours devotedly,
S. W. RICHARDS.

Raising a ruckus

"Robbers" hold up a stagecoach carrying passengers Salt Lake Mayor Deedee Corradini, North Salt Lake Mayor Jake Simmons and Tooele's economic development director Scott Muir to raise funds for Mothers Against Drunk Driving. The daylong event in North Salt Lake attracted more than 50 people and raised $12,000 — with an additional $3,000 expected from the sale Tuesday of a bison, donated by South Jordan rancher Otto Jones. The money will be used to send Utah high school students to a national anti-drugs convention. Jones said the passengers were excited about the ride until the stagecoach horses broke out in a full run, then "things got real quiet inside. I think they were a little scared." Tortilla Flats on U.S. 89 in North Salt Lake also contributed an authentic Mexican meal to visitors for $5 to raise funds. Utah's MADD president, Kathy Seiverts, is pleased with the contributions. She believes sending Utah kids to the Dallas conference is a great idea.
